"Christopher Jr.," the comedy to Maude Adams and John Drew, and it treat of the kind that Honolulans so much relish.

The plot is an epitome of real life and it conterns a young man, son of a milionaire, who suffers anancial embarrassment as a result of his penchant for fast and furious living. His father, a stern, forbidding, pompous old gentleman, with ostentatious pride, consents to restore him to favor if he will consent to marry his partner's daughter. This the young man refuses, and, what is more, can not, since he has entered into a secret marriage with a girl whom he has never seen. The son goes to Bombay, where, un-known to himself, the girl with whom he had contracted the marriage is also living. Of course, it comes out in the end. does, but not before funny situations and hilarious complications are brought to the surface.
